B-Tech brings black ops to System X range of mounts

Audio Visual mount manufacturer B-Tech have listened to customer demand by providing their popular System X range in black, as well as their traditional silver.

Since the official launch at the end of this summer, System X has become one of the most sought after mounting solutions from the B-Tech range, with demand for BT8370 and BT8371 video wall stands quickly growing across all corners of the globe.

Working closely with a broad range of installers and end-users, B-Tech, who design and engineer their products from their UK head office, have quickly responded to feedback which highlighted the demand for a finished black installation.

Mark Walker, Global Business Development Manager for B-Tech, said: "Choice is always a good thing and following requests from our customers it was clear that there's a demand for black System X. While some of our customers have praised the popular silver design, others prefer black, depending on the application, so we now have both bases covered!"

As well as bespoke and large scale orders, this means that all off-the-shelf and custom configured BT8370 and BT8371 video wall stands are available in either black or silver. Both versions will of course come with all of the same high-end features, such as cable management, aesthetic trims and end caps, adjustable levelling feet (BT8370) or 4" braked castors (BT8371).
